SPECIAL REPORT:

AUGUST 2017 – IKARUSdilapidated Locky Part II:

2nd Wave of Ransomware Attacks
Uses Your Scanner/Printer, Post Office Billing Inquiry

Locky Ransomware August 2017 Special Report Part II

A second wave of new but related IKARUSdilapidated Locky ransomware attacks has occurred, building on the attacks discovered by the Comodo Threat Intelligence Lab (part of Comodo Threat Research Labs) earlier in the month of August 2017. This late August campaign also uses a botnet of “zombie computers” to coordinate a phishing attack which sends emails appearing to be from your organization’s scanner/printer (or other legitimate source) and ultimately encrypts the victims’ computers and demands a bitcoin ransom.

The larger of the two attacks in this wave presents as a scanned image emailed to you from your organization's scanner/printer. As many employees today scan original documents at the company scanner/printer and email them to themselves and others, this malware-laden email will look very innocent.

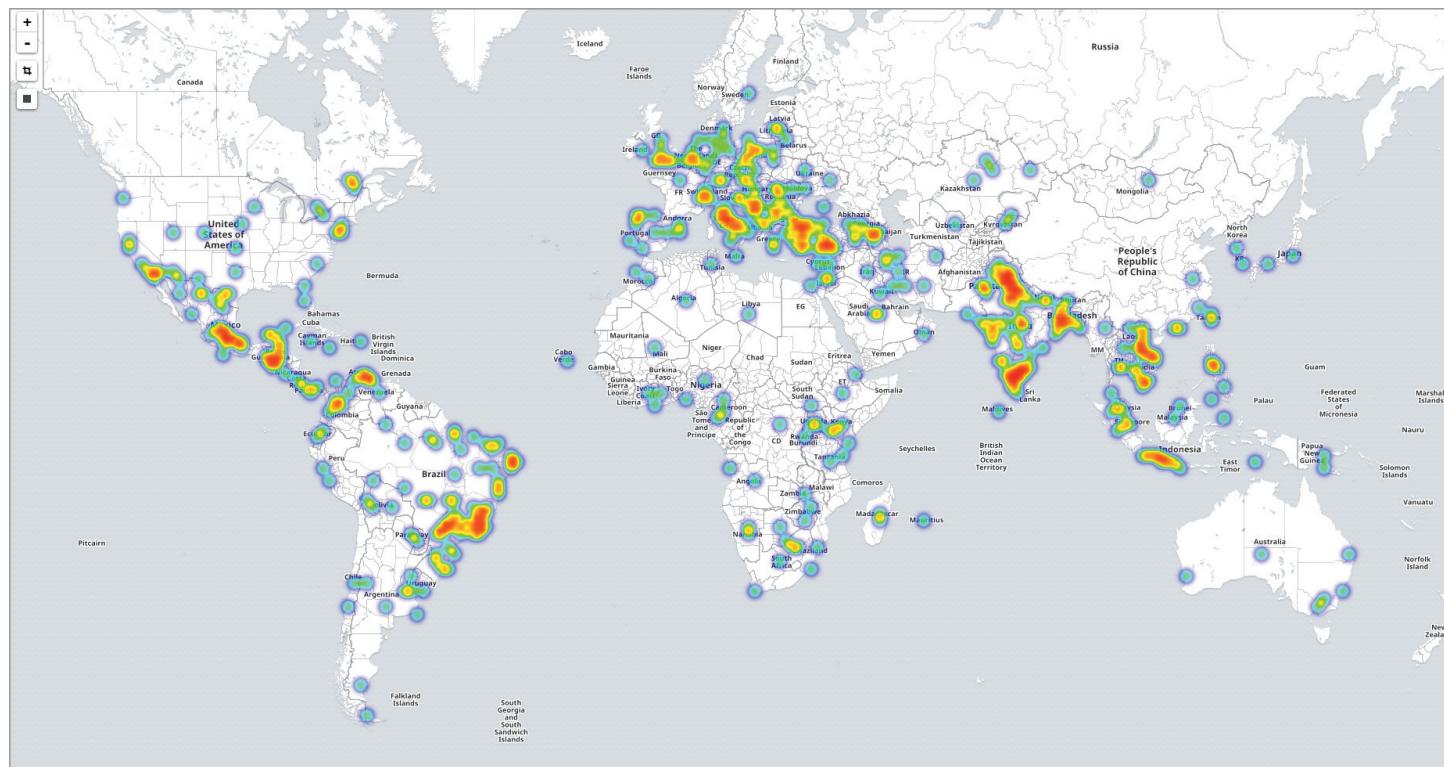

The sophistication here includes even matching the scanner/printer model number to make it look more common as the Sharp MX2600N is one of the most popular models of business scanner/printers in the market.

This second wave August 2017 phishing campaign carrying IKARUSdilapidated Locky ransomware is, in fact, two different campaigns launched 3 days apart. The first (featuring the subject "Scanned image from MX-2600N") was discovered by the Lab to have commenced primarily over 17 hours on August 18th and the second (a French language email purportedly from the French post office featuring a subject including "FACTURE") was executed over a 15-hour period on August 21st, 2017. Each continued beyond those surges but in much lesser quantities.

In contrast to the initial 2017 IKARUSdilapidated Locky campaign which distributed malware with the ".diablo" extension and a script that is a Visual Basic Script (and has a ".vbs" extension), both new attacks have interesting variations to not only fool users with social engineering , but also to fool security administrators and their machine learning algorithms and signature-based tools.

The encrypted documents have a ".lukitus" extension. The first is distributing ".vbs" files via email, but the second one is distributing JavaScript or ".js" files. This shows that the malware authors are evolving and changing methods to reach more users and bypass security methods.

Both English and French language phishing approaches are used in these two new attacks, which were launched from, and impacted, numerous countries around the world. Here is a heat map of the first attack on August 18th featuring the “Scanned Image” subject line.

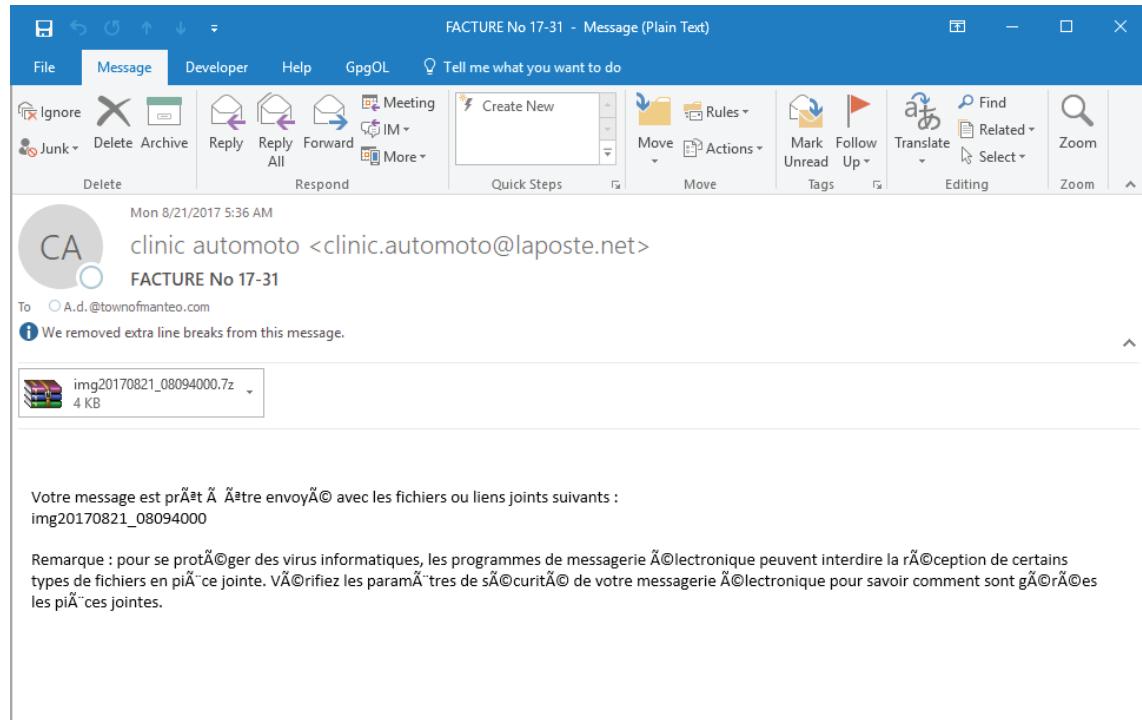

Interestingly, 27% of the 54,048 IP addresses used in the “Scanned Image” attack were also used in the first IKARUSdilapidated Locky attacks on August 9th-11th, 2017 and the top source countries of the botnet “zombie computers” remained the same: Vietnam, Turkey, India and Mexico. Considering some of the computers taken over in early August were Internet Service Providers (ISPs), it is a bit surprising that the vulnerabilities were not addressed in the week+ since the first attack and botnet takeover.

Country	Sum - Count Of Emails
Vietnam (VN)	17,061
India (IN)	9,591
Mexico (MX)	4,193
Turkey (TR)	3,535

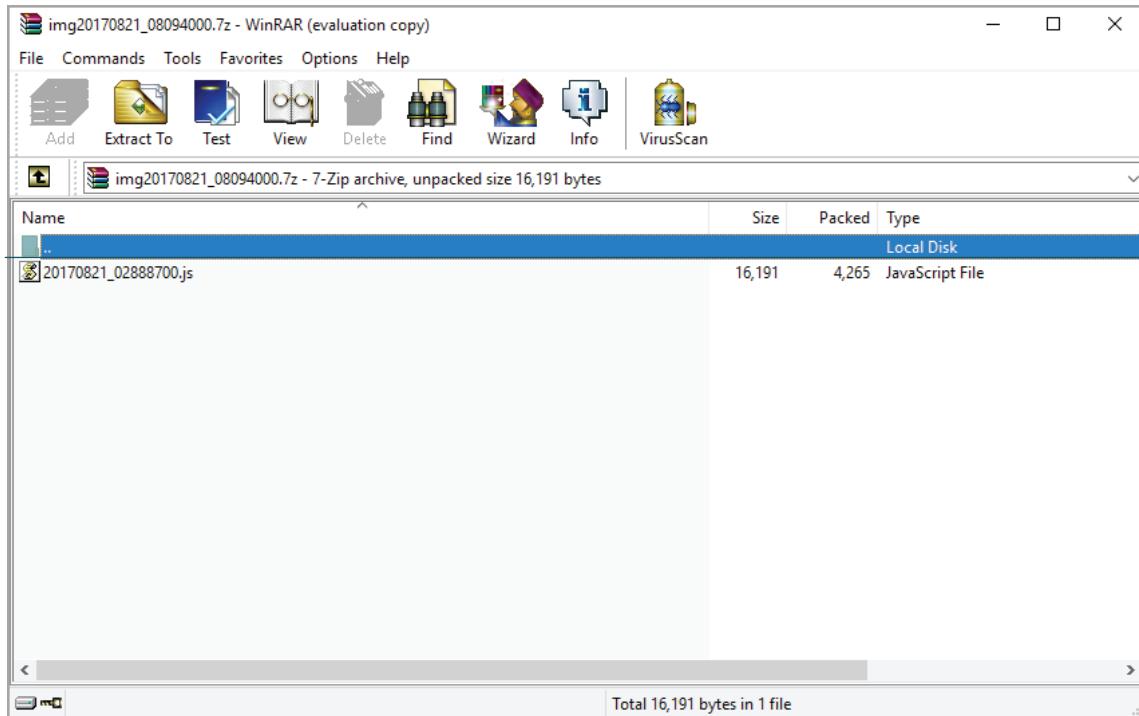

ISPs in general were co-opted heavily in this attack which points to both the sophistication of the attack and inadequate cyber-defense at their endpoints. Here are the leading range owners detected in the “Scanned image from MX-2600N” attack:

Range Owner	Sum - Count Of Emails
Vietnam Posts and Telecommunications (VNPT)	11,551
Airtel Broadband	3,302
VDC	2,946
Turk Telekom	2,795
Viettel Corporation	1,067
Iusacell	1053

The French language attack (see below) presents as a “FACTURE” message which translates to a BILL or BILLING inquiry from a laposte.net email address (which is a domain used by a popular French post office company).

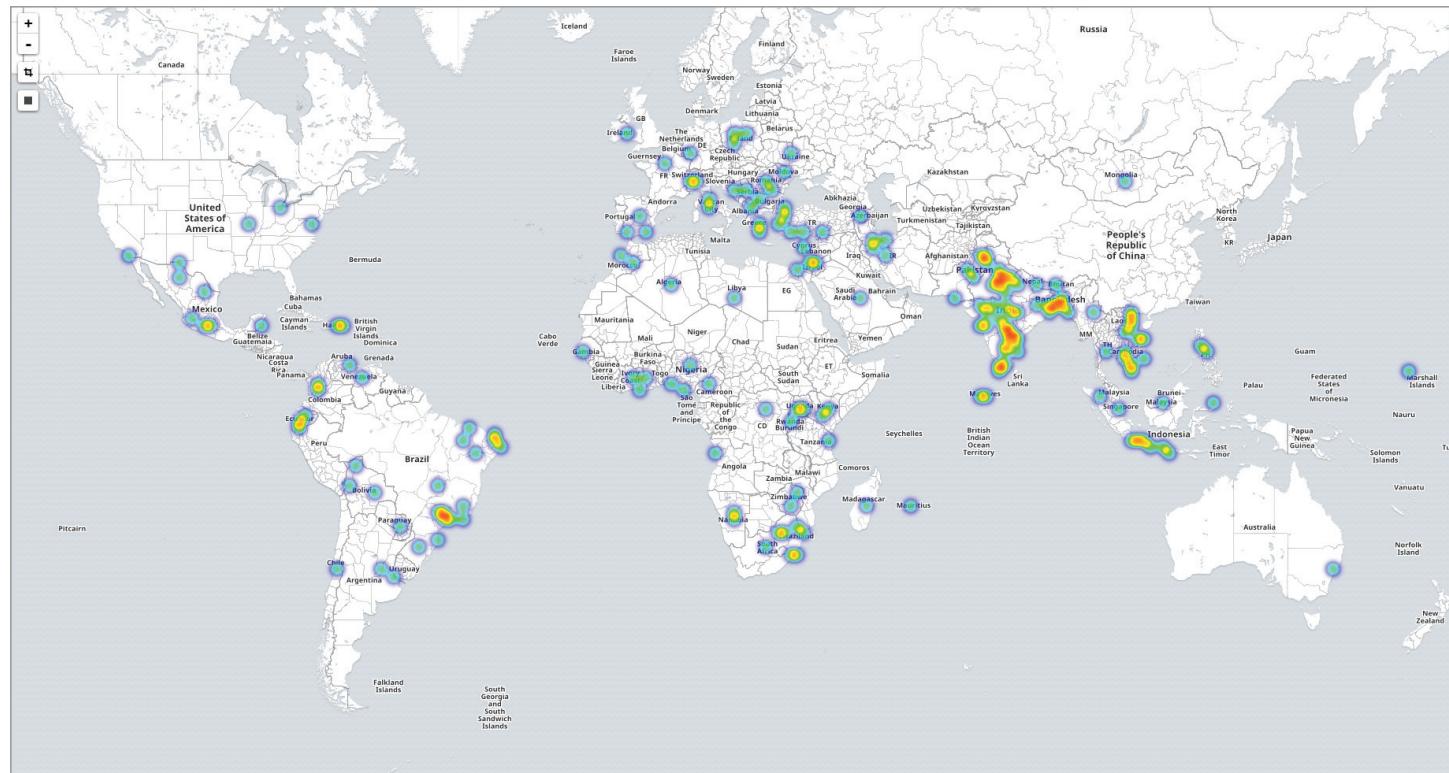

When the attachment is clicked it appears as a compressed file to be unpacked:

Here you can see a sample of the scripting, which is quite different than that used in the attacks earlier in the month:

This second, smaller attack is captured in the below heat map and shows many European and Southern Asia hot spots, but minimal activity in United States and Russia:

17% of the IPs used in this attack were also used in the August 9th-11th IKARUSdilapidated Locky attacks, so the response to the takeover of those machines has been slow.

The Comodo Threat Intelligence Lab team was able to quickly verify the two new ransomware attacks via detections at Comodo-protected endpoints at the front edge of each new attack. As users clicked on the attachments in these innocuous emails, they were read as “unknown files,” denied entry to the infrastructure, and put into containment, where they were analyzed by Comodo’s machine learning-powered technology and, ultimately, by the lab’s human experts.

The Lab’s analysis of emails sent in the ‘Scanned image’ phishing campaign revealed this attack data: 8,886 different IP addresses being used from 127 different country code top-level domains maintained by the Internet Assigned Numbers Authority (IANA). The narrower “FACTURE” attack utilized 1657 different IP addresses from 74 country code domains.

As with the early August attacks, when the Lab team checked the IP range owners, we see that most of them are telecom companies and ISPs. This tells us that yet again the IP addresses belong to infected, now compromised computers (also called “zombie computers”). This campaign used a large bot network (or botnet), and had a sophisticated command and control server architecture.

The simulation of an internal scanner/printer, a second attack just a few days later, and the use of local language elements and a post office domain also continues the trend of increasing sophistication, organization and capability of new ransomware attacks and adds more credence to the call to act on the recommendation of security experts everywhere: “Adopt a default deny security posture” and thereby deny new, ‘unknown’ files entry into your IT infrastructure until you’re sure they are good, safe files.

“This first follow-up ransomware phishing attack so soon after the sophisticated August 9th-11th attack, showed us how dedicated they are at getting better at these types of attacks.” said Fatih Orhan, head of the Comodo Threat Intelligence Lab and Comodo Threat Research Labs (CTRL). “Another more targeted variant coming just 3 days later confirms their capability to scale up and to plan and execute multiple targeted campaigns and as with August 9th, when machine learning algorithms and artificial intelligence couldn’t identify these new unknown malware files, the default deny posture with containerization of unknown files was critical to protect customers. The Lab’s human experts from around the world were also needed to analyze and identify the code in the files and render a white list or black list verdict. As with the new ransomware detected earlier this month, there was dangerous, new ransomware attacking large numbers of endpoints in a coordinated pair of attacks essentially lasting just 17 and 15 hours respectively. Using ‘default deny’ security posture with containment of unknown files is what protected users’ endpoints from this new variant of a dangerous threat.”

Orhan went on to say, “Botnets of compromised “zombie computers” from ISPs are a particularly effective means of attack for criminals to both scale their ransomware attacks and to broadly bombard specific targets in a short-burst type of campaign. The attacks were over so quickly that only preventative measures would have made any real difference. Detection and response would have been too late here.”

Attack Data – A Deeper Dive

Diving into the data of this second wave of IKARUSdilapidated attacks a bit deeper, the Appendices that follow include more detail on the machines used in the attacks.

Appendix

NOTE: To compare the detail of these August 18 and 21, 2017 attacks with the original IKARUSdilapidated campaign of August 9, 10, and 11, see Part I of this Comodo Intelligence Lab Special Report entitled, “SPECIAL REPORT: AUGUST 2017 – IKARUSdilapidated: Locky Ransomware Family Back with a New Email Phishing Campaign Attack.” As the malware payload and ransom elements are the same in all three attacks, please see the original report to review those elements.

About The Comodo Threat Intelligence Lab

The Comodo Threat Intelligence Lab (the Lab) monitors, filters and contains, and analyzes malware, ransomware, viruses and other “unknown” potentially dangerous files 24x7x365 in over 190 countries around the world. With 5 offices spread across the Americas, Asia and Europe (and staff covering over 190 countries), the Lab is made up of more than 120 IT security professionals, ethical hackers, computer scientists and engineers (all full-time Comodo Lab employees) analyzing millions of potential pieces of malware, phishing, spam or other malicious/unwanted files and emails every day. The Lab also works with trusted partners in academia, government and industry to gain additional insights into known and potential threats.

The Lab is a key part of the Comodo Threat Research Labs (CTRL), whose mission is to use the best combination of cybersecurity technology and innovations, machine learning-powered analytics, artificial intelligence and human experts and insights to secure and protect Comodo customers, business and public sector partners and the public community.
